

Life vs. Death: A Battle for Souls

As religious fundamentalists continue to disassociate themselves from the creative and nurturing side of life, focusing their energies on destruction and death, we must ask ourselves what the difference is between life and death, particularly in those cultures that see death as a means to eternal life, and which is most important in these end times. We are now at a point where our souls have reincarnated multiple lifetimes to finally reap the rewards of these end times. While we may be reincarnated souls, and as such never die, does death as we know it really separate us from the Earth and return us to the life source? Is this belief truly the reward that the fundamentalists have been hoping for, by practicing death rituals such as war and destruction of the planet hoping to speed up a new heaven or life on Earth?

It is my understanding that we have been trapped in a cycle of reincarnation here on Earth until we've learned, digested, and regurgitated the lessons of love, compassion, cosmic connection and creativity, as practiced by our creator. If that's the case then here on Earth we have never really become one with the creator, even through death, because our lesson has been to remove the polarity that keeps us separated from one another and we have failed to do so. Thus, to move to this next step of consciousness or life, as practiced by earlier cultures before the fall of man, we must treat all living forms as part of the whole, give back what we take to replenish and nurture life, and above all else listen to our higher self, which manifests in creative outlets and makes the world a more beautiful place to live in.

Once we've accomplished this, the next step will be our unhindered reconnection with the cosmos and an ability to move freely in time and space, as unbound spirits, able to leave our bodies at will. This is something that most have been unable to do, particularly fundamentalists, because they are trapped in a death cycle, reliving the same old scripts until they have an epiphany through prayer or otherwise, see the light, and then take steps to evolve to the next consciousness level. And that level is eternal life. If a fundamentalist ever experienced this connection, they would not be a fundamentalist!

Shamans and seers understand that to make this connection means developing our creative selves; moving energy from our root chakra through the pineal gland in the top of the head. When we practice death and separation, however, and when we live in fear through dogmatic teachings and control systems, we never evolve past our solar plexus or third chakra, and thus, the higher heart, throat, third-eye and cosmic chakras remained blocked. Fear, death, hate, prejudice, phobias, and all physical symptoms are manifestations of this death culture that does not see the connection between Mother Earth, creativity, joy and life.

When we move the energy through our heart chakra--gaining an understanding that the world and cosmos are connected by practicing right speech and action--then we can rejoice in our connectedness, which opens our third-eye and allows us access to cosmic consciousness. The rejoicing part is mandatory. Whereas fundamentalists will tell you that sex, dance, music, art and theatre are suspect, leaving very little creative outlets for our souls to manifest spirit, it is actually these very acts that bring purpose, harmony and renewal to life. Without spirit, or “spiritual redemption”, on Earth, there is no life. Without spiritual redemption, the soul repeats the same cycles until it gets it right. Fundamentalists want to destroy and conquer spirit through terror, destruction, war and fear. Creativity wants to enliven spirit so that we can move beyond the mundane. Spirit nourishes the soul so that it can graduate to higher realms. Fundamentalism and dogma terrorize the spirit, keeping the soul enslaved and physically bound, even in death.

As we watch the world being destroyed through T.V. and newspapers it is more imperative than ever to choose creative outlets that counter destructive images. These are meant to destroy spirit and we must replace them with images and actions that are creative, loving, nurturing and meaningful. Only a culture of life will be able to manifest a new heaven on Earth. Creativity embellishes spirit and all life creating an unobstructed path to connect with the cosmos. Gaining full access to the cosmos will be part of our graduation ceremony. That ceremony is coming up very quickly. Choosing otherwise will mean being “left back” to reincarnate for another 26,000 years in our own self-created hell on Earth.
