

Harnessing the Quetzalcoatl Energies

Dawn Abel, Maya Mystery School of N. Calif.

The Earth is having a shakedown. The shakedown is affecting all of our institutions, particularly those that have anything to do with material and/or superficial profits and wealth. Like a carpet being shaken of fleas, anything that is not deeply rooted in integrity is beginning to fall, shatter, and get swept beneath the earth to disintegrate into sludge. The sludge will feed the new systems that will be deeply rooted in preservation, integrity, and common governance.

Quetzalcoatl is the feathered serpent that releases serpent-like energies through the Earth into the ether. If the energies are negative, they'll implode. If the energies are positive, they'll take flight through a mild to moderate windstorm, redefining the foundation of the Earth so that rebuilding can occur. The Quetzal bird provides a colorful display of the light energy spectrum that governs this process. Depending on the level of integrity manifesting upon the Earth at any given area, the releasing Quetzal energies will be governed by the chakra, or light energy, that is most active in the areas undergoing their transformations or shakedowns.

Because the Quetzal bird and what it represented to the Mayas have been compromised by plunderers in its natural environment, the serpent-bird's shadow will spew and release the blood of the ancestors that bathed the dying Quetzal bird's body so that the blood will replenish the Earth. The blood is shown on the Quetzal's crimson breast. This blood will feed and replenish the land with magnetic iron so that it can more easily absorb the restored natural resources that were stripped from it. The replenishing of the Earth may be in the form of magnetic storms and liquid iron that create havoc on the planet.

As the Earth shakes off its outer core and rids itself of its parasites and fleas, the highest Quetzal energy representing liberty will manifest and rise upon sections of the Earth so that the newly birthed manifestations of love and light can bear fruit. As the Earth shifts, these energies will circulate into the bloodstream of the atmosphere and seed new life. The first area in the US that will see the results of this manifestation will be the Four Corners region of Arizona.

The Hopis who unify this land have a cosmology similar to the Mayas. The Blue Star Kachina is the blue/violet light of transformation and change. The Quetzal bird's elongated upper-tail coverts are golden green with blue or violet iridescence that can be viewed under certain light conditions. When the Quetzal bird emerges as the Blue Star Kachina, the land will transform through radioactive light energy to its natural state. Those that cannot endure the energy frequency of the blue light will banish under its radioactive frequencies. As the transformation takes place, many others will take refuge in the old Earth corridors that lie under the landscape of the great Southwest. It will take years for the land to return to its natural state. Some areas will recover more quickly than others.

Those that have evolved beyond the banal red scorched Earth policies and its practices will be given opportunities to implement new light energy communication and healing modalities, to heal each other and the Earth. The blue-light energies will also be used to repair those who are injured. The blue-violet frequencies will usher in civil discourse and libertarian principles to bring peace and justice to evolving policies and procedures. The energies will provide a foundation for intellectual endeavors and cosmic communication.

The Quetzalcoatl energy, bathing the Earth in blue-violet light, will open the doors to cosmic interaction and learning. Only those who have successfully released their own energy blocks, thus allowing the free-flow of kundalini energy, will be grounded, protected from the high-levels of radioactivity, and ultimately liberated from bloodlust to make this transition to cosmic consciousness.
