

The Final Earth Battle

The last time Pluto passed over the Galactic Center, we had a revolution in this country. As we approach the 2008 elections, we need to reflect on what is happening in this country to get a look at where we may be between November 2008 and February 2009. We are involved in an unpopular war that the people don't want. We have a Defense Dept. that is asking for another 200 billion dollars to continue to fund the current war in Iraq. We have a defiant president who thinks he is king and continues to ignore the will of the people. We have an impotent Congress that has its hands tied due to the way our Constitution was written.

If we had a parliamentary democracy, we could have been rid of this administration by now. But by law, in our Constitutional democracy, we cannot override the president's will during war, even if we have the votes to veto his vetoes. That includes appropriations for war. As long as the commander-in-chief declares a state of emergency during a "proclaimed" war, he can take as much money as he wants, from wherever he can get it, to fund his whims. This is not a new tactic and has been used by previous administrations. This means that after stealing our treasury to line the pockets of his oil cronies, our liar-in-chief will now sell us further down the river at our the expense of our nation's future.

To add insult to injury, and as a word of caution, the GOP are not finished and will not be satisfied unless they have their own president in the White House. Despite all the verification and validation procedures that are being mandated for electronic voting systems, these guys are still up to no good and continue to circumvent the system. They have implemented a string of revisions to state voting rights laws, especially in the below-mentioned battleground states. They are behind an initiative to change the Electoral College in California, a state that is mandatory to winning the presidency. Additionally, in Ohio and Florida, which are two other battleground states, they have enacted state laws to again try to stifle minority votes. The implementation of these laws will make it easy for them to cage votes, which they attempted on a national level in Ohio and Florida in 2004 before the Republican National Committee was stopped as a result of public disclosures.

They've used caging to target racial minorities in Democratic precincts, which involves sending mass mailings to predominantly Democratic voters who are transient and move regularly so that their mail cannot be forwarded. Then upon return to sender, the unclaimed mail is compiled by name and the residents are proclaimed ineligible to vote. While a federal court did place an injunction against the Republican National Committee that barred them from engaging in racially targeted voter caging for 25 years, that injunction doesn't extend to the Republican state committees.

The point is, that despite a Democratic Congressional landslide last November, upon which people started to breathe easier and felt that there was no longer any need to worry or pay attention, this couldn't be farther from the truth.

I have noted on occasion that a revolution would soon be in the making. Pluto on the Galactic Center exposes all that's false and uses its elemental forces to literally and figuratively blow things up, good and bad. Once the public gets wind of the fact that nothing will change, that there is nothing we can do to stop the GOP criminals, and that we are selling our children's future down the river, the backlash will begin big time.

We are already seeing a launch of films exposing the truth about the Iraq war. We are also seeing films that show the parallels between the Iraq and Vietnam wars, encouraging the sleepers to wake up. Just because there is no draft this time around does not mean that there will not be a revolution on the streets. Everything points to this occurrence, the day we wake up in the near future and find ourselves under the control of a dictator who will willingly sacrifice our future and the future of the world in the name of a malevolent God, and against public opinion. Before we approach that moment, we must understand a few things about ourselves.

We cannot move into the future and a new mode of business without first cleansing ourselves of our past; that is, cleaning our own personal house. For some that cleansing will involve major releasing of anger and rage, for others it will involve releasing deep sorrow and regret, and for others it will involve total transformation from pacifist to activist. Yet there are others who after spending a lifetime in denial, will need to go to the wilderness of their minds to confront their demons and break through the walls of the superficial reality that fed their ego. For most, turning back is no longer an option. The final battle is not just for this planet or this country; it is for each one of us who needs to face the truth or the consequences of our actions or inactions while residing on this planet. If you bought into a system of lies, and thought that the end results would not have any effect on you, you will find that you have the most to lose when the system topples. And topple it will, one way or another.

Right now the system is top heavy and crowded with abusers who can no longer carry their own weight so that it must be carried by others. For example, our economy is currently being sustained by China. The abusers are stomping on the world and dumping their garbage for others to pick up, which means that the walls are starting to come down very quickly. When they do, those who have carried that weight will shrug and we will see a domino effect at every layer of this reality system and into the very systems built around this reality. There is no turning back at this point. The chips must fall where they may and the clean-up will be extremely tedious. It will take years to re-institute new systems and structures for the future.

To go back to the revolution at hand, our founding fathers may not have foreseen this particular future but they were aware that democracy is very fragile. It will take the will of the majority to make the transition and rid the planet of the vile filth that has eroded the fabric of our system. Once it is torn to shreds, it will not rise again. What will rise will be a new world where peace and justice and equanimity rule the land.

This is the only way any civilization will survive, and whether it is on this planet, or on another planet if this one is blown, it will be one more opportunity to get it right. While some will go out with an explosion, as that is what they brought upon themselves, others will either pick up the pieces, or walk away and calmly go about creating a new fabric for our existence. Some are working on it now. By January 2009, many new models will emerge into conscious awareness. For those who are ready, and have been planning to do so for some time, these will be the folks who will jump in head-first and plow the new fields of reality. If you have had your eyes and ears open, if you have seen the direction that the new consciousness is taking, you will easily walk the new path.
