

Controlling the Earth's Portals

The next ten to 15 years will prove interesting, if not critical, in how the U.S. and the rest of our world either unite to open galactic relations and trade both on Earth and abroad, or continue to battle each other to control access to our ports, also known as portals. These battles are occurring on a global and galactic scale. What's most interesting is how these portals are representative on a geographic scale of the battle to control our values and the type of environment those who stay on will live in.

There are three major portal areas right now that are playing out these battles on a global scale: the Pacific Coast or West coast of the U.S., the Atlantic Coast or East coast of the U.S. combined with the Midwest (Bible belt), and the Middle East (Mideast); the two latter known as the religious belts of their respective regions.

The Atlantic Coast is currently embroiled over who will have access to and run their ports. They are the big business/Wall street types. The Atlantic coast is governed by the old Atlantean energies from Europe and the U.S. that have flourished through Western imperialism. They largely attempt to control the world through imperialist trade and war. The Atlanteans supposedly destroyed their civilization through misuse of technology and their consuming greed.

The Pacific Coast is governed by Lemurian energies that have largely flourished through cultural trade and a mind-melding of varying cultural interests. It is now the Lemurian energies that are creating new technologies which will supercede the predominance of weapons systems. The Lemurian element will advance toward new, sustainable and economically viable environments. The old military energies have all but left the west coast since the break-up of the Soviet Union, although they do linger. Most of the current conflicts between Atlantean mentalities vs. Lemurian mentalities have mostly to do with Texas big business vs. California multi-cultural business. They are diametrically opposed in their view of the world and the mission of the U.S.

The Middle East is a hot bed for religious fanaticism, as is our own Midwest or Bible belt, which includes Texas. These are forces that would like to stop progress in the name of strict observance to a patriarchal system that developed in the Middle East and branched out into the three major Western religions. Their forefather is the biblical Abraham and to this day, the religious fanatics won't unite. Their primary portals exist in the Sinai desert and make up the countries of Israel, Iraq, Iran, and Syria. The Middle East is also a hot bed for old Atlantean energies, ever since God originally destroyed his enemies with nuclear weapons (Sodom and Gomorrah).

Whoever was spared or survived the destruction pledged allegiance to this western-style warlord who demanded strict obedience and blood sacrifices. Is it any wonder that Bush senior was posed to perform a ceremony at the Pyramid at Giza during the millennium celebration? He was CIA Director and is a chief Atlantean whose family has dealt in illegal weapons trading since the S.S. in Germany. That ceremony was cancelled due to local protests.

The Atlantean elements regained a stronghold on these portals when the British began to establish trade routes and colonize these areas under T.E. Lawrence, better known as Lawrence of Arabia. The portals through the Sinai have always been used for trade, but not only between geographic regions-- also between the planet and cosmic warlords, as noted in Zecharia Sitchin's Wars of Gods and Men. Modern-day Atlantean energies continue to use military technology and weapons to control access to ports and portals in the Middle East. They have traded arms for hostages, as well as set up puppet governments to do protect their portals and trade resources using weapons that now are unaccounted for. They have also recently attempted to provide their cohorts, who hold major interests in oil and weapons trading (in Dubai, an island off the United Arab Emirates), access to U.S. ports.

While the Atlanteans have also dealt with immigration issues, they have all traditionally been European and their cultures have most always been Judeo-Christian in belief. With the attempt to open up new ports to allow Mideast trade, yet another Western-devised religion (Islam), whose fundamentalists value war over peace, would have contributed to the religious chaos both in the U.S. and abroad. The Midwest portal (Bible belt) on the other hand, is one that consists more of values than of trade at least since the Civil War. But it has helped to promote the Atlantean values of war, patriarchy, and fundamentalism that have kept Atlanteans at the forefront of the weapons technology and black-market industries. The Atlanteans still control the Eastern portals, some of the Mideast portals, the Midwest portals, and would like to control the Western portals and Pacific portals, but their attempts to make inroads have been difficult and fraught with failed coups and revolutions.

The oldest power portal has been in the Sinai and has been fought over for millennia. It has been most recently controlled by the Atlanteans; while the growing Lemurian portal that is bringing an influx of differing international values is the San Francisco Bay area. It is this clash between the Atlantean and Lemurian portals that is currently manifesting in Washington D.C, which will determine the direction of the planet and of our galactic awareness and relations. That is, on the west coast, equality and equanimity are becoming elements in building sustainable economies, as well as providing solutions to complex social issues and an awareness of a more approachable cosmic order. This is contrary to the old-school fundamental teachings to kill in the name of God. The Lemurian practices are those that oppose war, fundamentalism, and the patriarchal business practices of plundering for ownership and wealth at the expense of the planet.

The new values are being reframed as secular, but with cultural considerations that do not infringe on one another or on the planet. It will involve a delicate balancing act to get there, but as long as Lemurians can create this balance, they will control the ports. They will ultimately create the template for living together harmoniously, respecting each others values, and joining the galactic community.

San Francisco is a major portal for so-called “liberal” values, which I like to think of as more “open and unencumbered” values that allow an international melding of minds and cultural beliefs. Granted, there are problems that need to be addressed, but San Franciscans seem more willing to work on the issues and integrate their values for “the needs of the many” (Star Trek II: Wrath of Khan). The Lemurian portals have more to do with trading knowledge, culture, and best practices.

San Francisco is also engaged in an ever-growing trade with a predominantly Asian industry, and the Port of San Francisco is the biggest port for “cultural” trade on the West Coast. Granted, some of the Asian nations, while rich in culture and heritage, have stifled civil liberties within their own countries and still have a way to go. But in San Francisco, as we open our shores to more immigrants from these areas, we need to nurture the best of these cultures while restricting the worst.

The San Francisco portal is the Mission Control center for the Lemurian galactic portal. Think Star Trek IV, The Voyage Home. Not everything was always perfect at Starfleet Command but there was always a concerted effort to keep a lasting peace and work out cultural differences to avoid galactic war. If S.F. ultimately controls our ports and portals, both in trade and in values, civil liberties and multi-cultural acceptance will continue to influence those entering our ports. However, the Lemurians still have a lot of homework to do.

There are numerous issues that still need to be resolved to enter Galactic relations and it begins at home. There needs to be a balance between trade/capitalism and social values/socialism that allows both standards to coexist and prosper. Attention needs to be given to general civil standards that consider the common needs of all cultures. What hurts San Francisco in the eyes of its critics is that in its effort to be unencumbered there is an “anything goes” mentality that does not always take general common sense into consideration when dealing with issues that offend different groups of people.

Lemurians will need to institute a cultural commission that can look at and set common and practical guidelines for public interaction. Law and order still need to prevail in any given society or chaos will emerge. Hopefully, these laws and implementation of order will depend less on weapons and more on respecting each person’s cultural, social, gender, and ethnic needs, within reason. This means considering those elements of inter-relations that the majority may find challenging due to their differing beliefs and addressing them by finding “common ground” for private and public practice. In one aspect, this will govern separation between church and state. On the other, it will govern practical approaches to social mores that all can abide by. This will eliminate the need for fundamentalist religious institutions that tend to rise up to impose strict moral codes.

While Atlanteans and Lemurians are scattered across the planet as are fundamentalists, their influences are most obvious, at the moment, at their respective portals. The most influential portals right now, at least for the U.S., are the Atlantic and Pacific portals. Whoever controls our ports and portals over the next 20 years, will control the planet, with the ultimate power to unite or divide. Major battles over importing, exporting, and immigration, as well battles determining which countries will ultimately gain access to and end up controlling our ports, will be played out over the next 20 years. Our ports serve as our gateway into and out of our country and the world. Some ports will lean toward trading weapons for the black markets while others will lean toward trading knowledge and good will.

Possibly the prophesied 2012 shift will occur in such a way that the Lemurians will be separated from the Atlanteans once-and-for-all by splitting our reality systems and access to each portal. I'd like to believe that the Lemurians will emerge as the central guiding power on my Earth, equipped to balance liberty with social and economic standards that create responsible action. And San Francisco, as the Lemurian portal, still needs to address and resolve some burning cultural, social, environmental, and economic issues if it is to become a major Earth port for trade and galactic relations. So far, it is on its way to proving itself up to the task.
