

The End of the Mayan Long Count Calendar

Dawn Abel, Director

Much has been said this past month (Dec. 2011) regarding the countdown to December 21, 2012. From extreme denial and ridicule, to prophecies of doom and gloom, to expectations of miracles and the uplifting of humanity, everyone seems to have an opinion as to how the year 2012 and the Long Count Calendar will end.

Many noted scholars and professional students of Mayan civilization, as well as Mayan shaman and timekeepers, have written extensively on the subject. All seem to have conflicting views, based on their own scholarly or scientific findings and/or perceptions of what the Mayas meant when they predicted the end of this age. I've written about the conflict between John Major-Jenkins and Carl Johann Calleman, two leading new-age scholars and scientists. Calleman predicted that October 28th, 2011, was the end the Mayan Universal Underworld, Oxlahunkin, which moved us into a ninth-wave cycle that carries no predictable linear timeline but more of a wave of change. Does that mean that it is now up to us to create a new reality based on a new pulse wave? That seems feasible.

Jenkins is of the school that December 21, 2012 will be the final date of a long linear cycle, propelling the planet into an undefined new timeline. That also seems feasible. I've looked at the writings of both and believe that the December 2012 date is a doorway, which we are now moving toward, which will elevate us to higher, unified and interdimensional consciousness; one that was not attained during the Age of Pisces, but which will become realized during the Age of Aquarius. What this means is that 2012 is not the end of the world, it is a new beginning, a doorway that Aldous Huxley once called, "the door of perception", which will change our perception of time, space, and interdimensional consciousness at a collective level.

What is a unified interdimensional consciousness? It is the ability to tap into the "collective unconscious," as defined by Carl Jung, but in concert with those who are on the same unified path so that all share the same experiences and communications from a higher source. I noticed to some degree that this was beginning to happen over the last 20 years; an idea would come to mind and then suddenly those in the same circle of spatial consciousness would be talking about the same. This was only unusual because others were not on the same plane of consciousness.

However, when you look at mass movements in the history of the planet, they are usually generated by those sharing the same consciousness or idea. The 60s brought about mass movements that pushed consciousness beyond the individual and family to civil rights, women's rights, environmental rights, and sustainable development. These were defining moments for the United States, and they continued to spread throughout the globe.

But interdimensional consciousness is different. It deals with aspirations that go beyond physical movements; it deals with knowledge that there is a vibrant galactic energy force, or pulse wave, which is propelling the planet toward massive planetary change, systematically destroying the old ways to bring in the new.

That is what I believe the Long Count calendar is about; the end of a long evolutionary cycle that we have historically known for at least the last 5000 years. But all that we have known during this cycle is the building and destroying of structures and cultures as a result of wars, which elevate victors to the roles of tyrants and victims to the roles of martyrs. The new consciousness has no tyrants and does not require martyrs. We can all live, rather than die, for our beliefs and our just causes. We can tap into the potential of the collective and move forward into an intergalactic consciousness, which is a vibration beyond the physical and mundane.

The new time demands awareness of that beyond our own immediate backyard because the heartbeat of the planet is integrally interconnected in its various eco, political, and economic systems. It is also connected to the galaxy and universe; “as above, so below.” That deep planetary connection was not the case in the 20th century and even in the previous centuries when different civilizations around the globe rose and fell of their own accord. Today, when one civilization falls, there is a domino effect. As a result, it takes ONE-world consciousness to come together to make significant change. And following that propulsion of energy, or wave swell – which creates movement and heat – a spiraling light energy bridge, or ladder, is formed, which those in the midst of the elevating spiral can climb. That, to me, signifies the end of the Long Count calendar.

Many of the gurus and wise ones of the 20th century have used the end of the Mayan Universal Underworld cycle to wrap up their teachings. This is because the future lies in the collective sharing of information received freely and heard both individually and collectively from higher sources; sources that no longer require the channeling or dissemination by a few select beings or church fathers. The information is available to anyone who will listen; it always has been, but too many were under the authoritarian almighty “Godspell” to notice. Many are now listening and taking their marching orders from a higher source, ONE that is fusing unity from the boundaries of extremism.

There are some who remain out of the harmonic spiral because they continue to play out the old scripts and will most likely do so until they pass on. They are fundamentalists and terrorists who are continuing their final grabs at power, at everyone else’s expense. There is no difference between one sect of fundamentalism and another, as there is no difference between one flavor of fundamentalist terror and another. They cannot break their scripts due to endless-loop linear programming. Their genetics never evolved because of defects in their original God program.

The programming of the 21st century and beyond is no longer linear; it is harmonic and requires a higher vibration to move the energy upward. The Indigo children, now young adults, are the most evolved recipients of this genetic evolution, having been born with the genetic codes fully active, although many born before were also recipients of this genetic evolution and their codes evolved with time. The Indigo adults are now taking action into their own hands. By uniting, they are moving upward. This upward motion is called “ascension.” To ascend the ladder of light requires an understanding and participation in a higher cause; one that is selfless rather than self-serving, and one that is united with the ONE, rather than divided against a unity consciousness.

We are moving into exciting times with great potential. The old structures will fall, but as with all life cycles, new structures will spring forward from the rubble and bear fruit. This will occur as the result of those pressing forward and upward for the sake of global change.

End Note: I will continue to post to the Maya Mystery School website throughout 2012. Whereas others who were involved in providing guidance through these changes used 2011 as their stopping point (due to the Oct. 28 Mayan Universal Underworld end-cycle), I believe that there is still much that we can learn during these changes. Thus, I will continue to discuss and clarify these changes and implications, if for no reason other than to help everyone confirm what they are intuiting and feeling.
